

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT

Adult Bible Equipping Class
Anchorage Grace Church
2016

by Nathan R. Schneider, Th.M.

OLD TESTAMENT FLYOVER:

The Book of Psalms is God's prescription for a complacent church, because through it he reveals how great, wonderful, magnificent, wise, and utterly awe-inspiring he is! If God's people before the Incarnation could have such a faith in the Lord, witnessing to his greatness and readiness to help, how much more should this be true among twentieth-century Christians! The Book of Psalms can revolutionize our devotional life, our family patterns, and the fellowship and the witness of the church of Jesus Christ.

Willem A. VanGemeran, "Psalms," in EBC, 12 vols., ed. Frank E. Gæbelein (Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1991), 5:5.

Psalms

I. Introduction

A. Title

The title of the book in our English Bibles is derived both from the Latin title Psalmi and the Greek psalmoi, which, as it were, both translate the Hebrew term mizmôr, which refers to "songs accompanied by musical instrument."¹ In this way, these titles emphasize the form of these compositions—they are "songs" to be sung.

The Hebrew title, however, is not mizmôr but rather hillîm, which means "praises." Thus, while the Greek and Latin titles focus on form, the Hebrew title emphasizes the purpose and content of the psalms. This seems fitting considering that while they were songs in the past, the way in which they were sung has been lost to us now. But their purpose and content remain intact.

B. Authors & Date

There are a total of 150 psalms in the Hebrew Psalter, and 102 bear the name of its author. In fact, a number of different psalmists appear in the book, representing a massive span of Israelite history:

¹ Willem A. VanGemeran, "Psalms," in EBC, 12 vols., ed. Frank E. Gæbelein (Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1991), 5:20.

Author	Psalm #
David	75
Anonymous	48
Asaph	12
Sons of Korah	10
Solomon	2
Ethan	1
Heman	1
Moses	1

As is evident, the Psalms embrace the totality of Israel's history. It includes a psalm by Moses written during the time of Israel's wilderness wanderings. And it includes psalms written during the post-exilic generation. Thus, it is the OT in miniature, and as it stands in its final form, could be viewed as a post-exilic book. Though a majority of the psalms were written before the exile and concern events that occurred before the exile, the book was not organized until after Israel's release.

C. Organization

1. Division of the Psalms

As a collection of prayers and songs of praise, the book of Psalms exhibits a thoroughly organized scheme. They are arranged into five books of unequal length which from Jewish tradition seem to be modeled after the five books of Moses. In fact the Midrash on the Psalms notes that "Moses gave the Israelites the five books of the Torah, and coordinate therewith David gave them the books of the Psalms" (1:1). Each book, in turn, ends with a doxology which may have been part of the original composition, or may have been appended to the close of each book by one or more editors (cf. Ps 72:20):

Book	Psalms	Doxology
I	Psalms 1-41	41:13
II	Psalms 42-72	72:18-20
III	Psalms 73-89	89:52
IV	Psalm 90-106	106:48
V	Psalms 107-150	150:1-6

It is quite possible that this 5-fold division is as ancient as the book itself, dating back to before the completion of the OT (approx. 400 B.C.), and may have already occurred before the composition of the book of Chronicles:

- In 1 Chronicles 16:7, David assigned Asaph and his family the responsibility of giving thanks to Yahweh at the tabernacle, and provided a thanksgiving psalm for this purpose. The psalm he provided in 1 Chronicles 16:8-36 is actually a compilation of several different Davidic psalms (Pss 96, 105, 106), and the final verses (1 Chron 16:35-36) appear to be a quotation of the doxology at the close the Book 4. This would seem to indicate that the doxology that closes Book 4 was already in place in the time of David.

- The conclusion of Book 2 includes a subscription noting that "the prayers of David the son of Jesse are ended" (Ps 72:20). Since Books 1 and 2 contain more than Davidic psalms, and Books 3-5 also contain psalms by David, it's quite plausible that the editor who appended it meant to say that in his collection he had included all the psalms of David known to him and that the 9 psalms ascribed to Korah and Asaph that open Book 2 were at one time united with Pss 73-83 (also ascribed to Asaph). With those removed, it is possible to unite Pss 51-70 with Book 1, making the subscription to Psalm 72 a fitting conclusion to the Davidic collection.
- Second Chronicles 29:30 states that "King Hezekiah . . . ordered the Levites to sing praises to Yahweh with the words of David and Asaph the seer." This could, in fact, be a reference to the Davidic collection in Books 1 and 2 and the Asaph collection in Book 3.
- Some psalms are repeated in different books:

Psalm	Book	Repeated	Book
Psalm 14	I	Psalm 53	II
Psalm 40	I	Psalm 70	II
Psalm 57:8-12	II	Psalm 108	V
Psalm 60:7-14

The Psalter also contains a number of smaller collections or subgroups which may have circulated as independent groups of psalms apart from the 5 complete books:

Name	Psalms
Psalms of Ascent	120-134
Asaph Group	73-83
Sons of Korah groups	42-49
	84-87 (except 86)
Mikhtam group	56-60
Praising Yahweh	93-100
Praise Psalms	103-107
Hallelujah group	145-150

John Sampey comments:

The Psalter has had a long and varied history. No doubt the precentor of the temple choir had his own collection of hymns for public worship. Small groups of psalms may have been issued also for private use in the home. As time went on, collections were made on different organizing principles. Sometimes hymns attributed to a given author were perhaps brought into a single group. Possibly psalms of a certain type, such as Maskil and Mikhtam psalms, were gathered together in small collections. How these small groups were partly preserved and partly broken up, in the history of the formation of our present Psalter, will, perhaps, never be known.²

² John Richard Sampey, "Psalms, Book of," in ISBE, 5 vols., ed. James Orr (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1939)

2. Themes and Types of Divisions

As noted previously, the 5 books of the Psalms mirror or parallel in some regard the 5 books of the Torah. Yet while the Torah is a book about the Mosaic Covenant, the Psalms could be called a "cantata of the Davidic Covenant," for it is a musical reflection on this covenant.

Books 1 and 2 focus on the promises made to David in 2 Samuel 7:8-16 and the hope of its fulfillment:

BOOK I

Psalms 1-41

The glory years of the Davidic kingdom

Authors	Names of God	Psalm Types	Themes
David (37)	Yahweh (278x)	25 laments	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Two ways: godly/ungodly • Troubles of God's people • Faith & trust in Yahweh • Prayer
Jeduthun (1)	God (49x)	7 hymns

BOOK II

Psalms 42-72

The troubled years of the Davidic kingdom

Authors	Names of God	Psalm Types	Themes
David (18)	Yahweh (32x)	17 laments	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Troubles of God's people • Faith & trust in Yahweh • God, our refuge • Yahweh is King & Judge • Prayer
Sons of Korah (7)	God (198x)	5 hymns
Asaph (1)
Solomon (1)
Jeduthun (1)

Book 3 focuses on the dismantling of the Davidic dynasty and the fear of the covenant's disillusionment:

BOOK III

Psalms 73-89

The breaking of the Davidic dynasty's power

Authors	Names of God	Psalm Types	Themes
Asaph (11)	Yahweh (34x)	10 laments	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • God is King & Judge • God's mercies for Israel in spite of her rebellion • Prayer for Israel's restoration • God's covenant • Forgiveness
Sons of Korah (3)	God (63x)	3 hymns
David (1)
Jeduthun (1)
Heman (1)
Ethan (1)

Book 4's overall emphasis is the sovereignty of God. In the wake of the collapse of the Davidic dynasty, the book highlights Yahweh as the one who has been, is, and always will be in control, even in view of the failure of the Davidic dynasty as lamented in Psalm 89. The book opens with the "Prayer of Moses," symbolic of the need to return to the Mosaic Covenant. It concludes with two historical psalms (Pss 105 and 106):

BOOK IV

Psalms 90-106

History of Israel from the Exodus onward
Authors	Names of God	Psalm Types	Themes
David (2)	Yahweh (115x)	2 laments	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Yahweh is King
Moses (1)	God (24x)	11 hymns	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Israel's praise • Experiencing God's grace & mercy • Salvation • Prayer

Book 5 is a massive and carefully selected conclusion to the Psalter. It focuses on the unfolding drama of redemption, returning to the covenant Name and psalms by David:

BOOK V

Psalms 107-150

Babylonian Exile, restoration, and beyond
Authors	Names of God	Psalm Types	Themes
David (15)	Yahweh (236x)	15 pilgrim songs	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The Word of God
Solomon (1)	God (31x)	5 "Hallelujah" psalms	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Yahweh's steadfast love • Zion & God's presence • Salvation • Thanksgiving • The world's praise • Prayer

D. Psalms Titles

116 psalms (>75% of the Psalter) have headings or titles which introduce the psalm with information about the author, the circumstances which brought about its composition or upon which it reflects, as well as a variety of liturgical and/or musical instructions.

1. Evidences for Originality

These headings or titles are often set apart from the rest of the psalm (left out of the versification), and some modern translations (e.g., Good News Bible) completely omit the headings, effectively suggesting that they are not original to the psalm nor inspired Scripture. As Sampey writes, "It is fashionable among advanced critics to waive the titles of the psalms out of court as wholly worthless and misleading." Yet there is strong evidence defending the authenticity of the headings as part of original the compositions, and thus part of inspired Scripture and worthy of preserving in translations and read both publically and devotionally.

a) They are authentic

Psalm 18 begins with a heading describing the historical circumstances leading to the composition of the psalm:

A psalm of David the servant of Yahweh, who spoke to Yahweh the words of this song in the day that Yahweh delivered him from the hand of all his enemies and from the hand of Saul. And he said...

Superscription to Psalm 18

The same psalm appears in 2 Samuel 22 along with an identical superscription (22:1) as part of a series of official documents appended to the Book of Samuel as supporting the history of David. The psalm in 2 Samuel 22 is older and most likely the original psalm, and the repetition of the heading is a strong argument for its authenticity and inspiration.

To put it a different way, if we are allowed to question the authenticity and originality of the heading of Psalm 18 so as to remove it from the text, so we must also allow ourselves to question and possibly remove the 2 Samuel 22:1. The same argument can be made for the superscription and subscription to the psalm of Habakkuk (Hab 3:1, 19).

b) They are ancient

The terms used in the psalm heading (e.g., Pss 46, 58) are so ancient that their meaning had been lost by the time the translators in Alexandria were translating the text into Greek 250-300 years before Christ. The older Greek version of the time had merely transliterated the more difficult and obscure terms, so when the LXX translators attempted their translation, they chose often spurious meanings for the words (e.g., "For the choir director" was sometimes translated as "unto the end").

c) They are accurate

The heading to Psalm 110 identifies David as the author of the psalm. The accuracy of the heading is confirmed by Jesus' use of an emphatic pronoun to identify David as author: "For David himself says in the book of Psalms..." (Luke 20:42). The heading of Psalm 110 is the only place in the OT containing details on the authorship of that psalm, meaning that Jesus took the heading as an accurate and authentic heading to the psalm.

2. Thirtle's Theory

In 1904, James Thirtle published a study called The Titles of the Psalms where he hypothesized that Both superscriptions and subscriptions were incorporated in the Psalter, and that in the process of copying the Psalms by hand, the distinction between the superscription of a given psalm and the subscription of the one immediately preceding it was finally lost.

When at length the different psalms were separated from one another, as in printed editions, the subscriptions and superscriptions were all set forth as superscriptions. Thus it came about that the musical subscription of a given psalm was prefixed to the literary superscription of the psalm immediately following it.³

To demonstrate this, he provided a series of evidences:

- Thirtle suggested the prayer of Habakkuk 3 as the model of a "normal psalm," which consisted of a literary superscription ("A prayer of Habakkuk the prophet, upon Shigionoth" [3:1]) and a musical subscription ("For the chief musician, on my stringed instruments" [3:19]).
- Hezekiah's prayer celebrating his recovery from illness (Isa 38:9-20) demonstrates this pattern as well. It begins with a superscription introducing the author and circumstance (38:9) and ends with a subscription which details the musical instruments that should accompany the psalm in public worship (38:20).⁴
- Thirtle suggested that returning the inaccurately divided subscriptions to their proper psalm resulted in a more intelligible connection between the psalm and its super-/subscription.
- Thus, when the subscription for Psalm 55 (improperly placed as part of the superscription to Psalm 56) was returned to its proper location, it harmonized with the contents of the poem: "For the choir director; according to the silent dove of those who are far off." Such a saying seems strange as an introduction to Psalm 56, but harmonizes perfectly with Psalm 55:6-8.
- The heading to Psalm 88 also receives clarification, since it contains two different authors, "the sons of Korah" and "Heman the Ezrahite," and because it includes instructions that the psalm should be performed mahalath leannoth, "dancing with shouting," a quizzical instruction considering that Psalm 88 is one of the blackest psalms in the Psalter. However, when it is returned as a subscription to Psalm 87, not only does it match the superscription as "a psalm of the sons of Korah," but it also matches the cheerful tone of Psalm 87 which itself speaks of singing and dancing (87:7).

II. The Types of Psalms

The Psalms are unique in that they have a dual identity. VanGemeran writes, "First and foremost [they are] God's Word to his people. We hear the voice of God in each individual psalm, through the many moods of the Psalms, and through the manifold themes of the Psalter."⁵ Yet at the very same time, they are thoroughly man's words to God. In fact, they are a mirror into the faith of a people that are separated from us by over 3,500 years and lived in a world and culture very different from our own.

³ Sampey, "Psalms"

⁴ Psalm 18 and its parallel in 2 Samuel 22 marks a shift from this pattern, as 2 Samuel 22 represents the original psalm which David most likely arranged specifically for use in public worship, thus adding the musical subscription found in Psalm 18 but absent in 2 Samuel 22.

⁵ VanGemeran, "Psalms," 5:5.

Thus, the Psalms reflect "the faith experience of the 'community' of God's people before the coming of Christ,"⁶ and the expressions of their faith were influenced not only by their experiences and circumstances but also by their literary and cultural context. Thus, we find in the Psalms not just one form or way of praising God, but many expressions and forms of prayers and praise. Understanding the various forms of the Psalms can aid a great deal in interpretation. Longman explains:

The Psalms may be grouped into three major categories: psalms of orientation, disorientation, and reorientation. The first group refers to psalms of pure praise to Yahweh. No obstacles stand in the way of the psalmist's relationship to God. The second group is composed of psalms of lament. Something has happened to disturb the divine-human relationship. The psalmist may feel that God has abandoned him, or perhaps, he may be experiencing God's hostility. Reorientation, the third group, describes those psalms where the lament has been heard and the relationship healed. The psalmist gives God thanks for hearing his prayer.⁷

A. Lament

Longman describes lament as "a prayer of disorientation."⁸ VanGemeran identifies it as the "prayer" aspect of the Psalms:

Prayer is man's communion with God. Prayers in the Psalms take the form of a complaint against the Lord. The individual or community laments the adversity, describes the evil in God's world, or petitions God to be true to his promises. Faith cries out for reality, and lament functions as an expression of authenticity.⁹

He goes on to note that such prayers reflect the faith experience of the "community" before the coming of Christ because their expressions of frustration, impatience, anger, and joy reflect the tensions between promise and alienation. One of the issues in the lament psalms lies in their definition as petition or complaint. They are both. The emphasis on prayer as petition may emphasize submission to the power of God. The stress of lament will bring out the struggle with God, as the psalmist wrestles with God's freedom, God's promises, and his own inability to understand God. In either case, the psalmist cries out in faith for the fullness of redemption.¹⁰

⁶ Ibid., 5:7.

⁷ Tremper Longman III, "Lament," in Cracking Old Testament Codes: A Guide to Interpreting the Literary Genres of the Old Testament, ed. D. Brent Sandy and Ronald L. Giese, Jr. (Nashville, TN: B&H Publishing, 1995), 198.

⁸ Ibid.

⁹ VanGemeran, "Psalms," 5:6.

¹⁰ Ibid., 5:7.

Within this type of psalm, there are both individual (Pss 3-7, 9-10, 12-14, 17, 22, 25-28, 31, 35, 38-43, 52-57, 59, 61, 63-64, 69-71, 77, 86, 88-89, 109, 120, 140-142) and corporate/national laments (Pss 44, 60, 74, 80, 83, 85, 90).

B. Praise

"Praise," in the words of VanGemenen, "is man's longing for God and for others to be moved with the same desire for God."¹¹ Whether when all is right, or when things had been wrong but God had moved and right was restored, praise represents man reciting and responding to the attributes and acts of God, and praising God for both.

The acts of God in the past filled his children with longing for renewal of his acts, thus intertwining history and eschatology. Israel praised God's acts in the past: Creation, Exodus, Conquest, life of David, victories, and restoration from the Exile. Israel praised the perfections of the Lord, his kingship, his revelation, and his covenant. But they longed for the fullness of redemption, especially when distressed. Any token of God's goodness in fulfilling his promise occasioned a greater hope of eschatological fulfillment. Hence praise bridged the two horizons of the past and the future.¹²

Two primary types of praise occur in the psalms:

- 1) Declarative praise (Pss 18, 30, 32, 34, 40, 106, 116, 138) can be described as prayers of reorientation, where the psalmist is praising God for what he has done. "When the psalmist had experienced dire need and had prayed to God for deliverance, and God had intervened by granting the psalmist an answer—a specific act of deliverance—the psalmist broke forth in praise."¹³ While the circumstance had brought about tension in his relationship with God, he had experienced a restoration of that relationship and he responded in public thanksgiving, desiring that the entire community understood what God had had.
- 2) Descriptive praise (Pss 33, 36, 105, 111, 113, 117, 135, 136, 146, 147) are prayers of orientation, where the psalmist is praising God for who he is. "Originally, psalms of descriptive praise were intended to be used either as a choral response or perhaps as a solo in the normal round of public or national worship. Because the psalmist was praising God primarily by describing his character, with a focus on the attributes of God—who he is and what is like—these psalms are frequently called hymns of praise or descriptive psalms."¹⁴

¹¹ Ibid., 5:6.

¹² Ibid.

¹³ Kenneth L. Barker, "Praise," in Cracking Old Testament Codes: A Guide to Interpreting the Literary Genres of the Old Testament, ed. D. Brent Sandy and Ronald L. Giese, Jr. (Nashville, TN: B&H Publishing, 1995), 221.

¹⁴ Barker, "Praise," 219.

C. Other Types

Six principal subtypes of psalms appear in the Psalter as subcategories of lament and praise psalms:

- 1) Hymns (Pss 24, 29, 33, 100, 103, 105, 111, 113-114, 117, 135-136, 145-150): The most general kind of praise psalm, which praise God in broad terms for his goodness throughout history, or his character and attributes.
- 2) Enthronement Psalms (Pss 47, 93, 95-99): "Yahweh reigns" is a characteristic feature of these psalms, and they celebrate the universal and eternal rule of God. "All passages that speak of a future coming of the LORD over Israel or over the whole earth, are enthronement psalms and may ultimately be messianic—indirectly or by extension—for to be fully realized, they require a future, Messianic Kingdom on the earth."¹⁵
- 3) Songs of Zion (Pss 48, 84, 87, 120-134): These are psalms which celebrate the centrality of Jerusalem/Zion in covenant life, and Pss 120-134 in particular—known as the "Songs of Ascent" were probably sung by pilgrims as they made their way to Jerusalem for the three annual festivals.
- 4) Royal Psalms (Pss 2, 20-21, 45, 72, 89, 101, 110, 132, 144): These psalms celebrate and focus on elements of the Davidic Covenant, and focus on the relationship on the king and his relationship to God.¹⁶ They may be directly messianic, or simply typify the ultimate Son of David.
- 5) Creation Psalms (Pss 8, 19:1-6, 104): Psalms which specifically focus on the creative work of God as representative of his majesty, power, goodness, sovereignty, and grace.
- 6) Wisdom Psalms (Pss 1, 37, 119): Psalms that, like Proverbs, "contrast the lifestyles and destinies of the righteous and the wicked."¹⁷

III. Major Themes

A. The Sovereign God

Since the Psalms are compositions of men's prayers and praises to God, it is not surprising that they are completely about God. Chisholm rightly asserts that "the central theme of the book of Psalms, which its prayers assume and its songs of praise affirm, is God's kingship."¹⁸ In one way or another, God's many attributes, his relationship to Israel and the nations, and his dealings with them throughout history, all reflect his sovereign reign.

¹⁵ Ibid., 220.

¹⁶ Robert O. Chisholm, "A Theology of the Psalms," in A Biblical Theology of the Old Testament, ed. Roy B. Zuck (Chicago: Moody Press, 1991), 258.

¹⁷ Ibid.

¹⁸ Ibid.

Thus, throughout the Psalms, the various psalmists focus on numerous aspects of God's person and works as expressions of his kingship over them.

a. The God the Creation

God's creatorship is the basis for his sovereign rule over the universe. In agreement with the opening words of the Torah (Gen 1:1), the psalms affirm that God created the heavens and the earth, and it is this fact that propels the psalmists to also affirm his sovereign authority and dominion over the universe. God is in complete control, and creation eagerly obeys his commands. The psalmists (i.e., David) also wonder at the incomprehensible privilege given to man to act as rulers over God's creation, thus affirming the Torah's view of man as God's image and thus divine representative (Ps 8); cf. Gen 1:26-28).

[See Pss 8, 19, 33, 74, 89, 93, 95, 104, 135, 136, 147, 148]

b. The God of Israel

The psalmists view Israel as Yahweh's special creation, and they often rehearse Israel's birth as a nation, deliverance from Egypt, conquest into Canaan, and history under Yahweh's lordship. He created them to be his special covenant people and to accomplish his special purposes on the world as promised to Abraham (Pss 95:6; 100:3; 149:2). He has been in complete control over their history, and should be praised because of his faithfulness to Abraham and Israel, even while they are in exile.

[See Pss 33, 95, 100, 105, 106]

c. The God of the Nations

Yahweh is not just the God of Israel, but also that of the nations, and the psalms present him as in absolute authority over them. The nations plan and scheme against God. They set themselves against him and his king (Ps 2:1-2). The kings of the earth think they will conquer God and his authority, but Yahweh laughs from heaven, will terrify the nations when he speaks to them in his fury, will frustrate their plans, and will establish his kingdom on earth through his anointed one.

[See Pss 2, 33]

B. The Righteous and the Wicked

The book of Psalms initiates with a dichotomy between the righteous and the wicked—two separate peoples with two separate outcomes (Ps 1:1-2). These become the two kinds of people found throughout the rest of the psalms. The righteous ones call out to Yahweh. They seek his help, his comfort, his protection, They sing his praise, and lament his reproach. And they are constantly persecuted by the wicked, who during this time are constantly on the attack. The wicked seem to prosper. They set themselves against God and against the righteous. Yet the righteous align themselves with God, experience trouble, but also rest in the reality that their sufferings and their faith will ultimately be vindicated.

[See Ps 1]

C. The Attributes of God Revealed to His People

The psalms reflect the heart of the righteous man—the man after God's own heart (i.e., David). As such, the psalms express the heart of those who cling to the attributes of God, whether in praise to him for who he is, or what he has done, or pleading for him to act according to who they know him to be.

Within the psalms, five attributes receive particular emphasis. The psalmists exalt Yahweh as loyal and faithful. He is the God of the covenant, and he upholds his promises. He is also good, in that he acts benevolently toward his people, and never maliciously. He is the source of their good in life. He is also righteous, and he upholds righteousness, justice, and purity. And he is compassionate. He looks upon the plight of his people. He rescues. He relents of anger.

D. David & The Davidic Covenant

David is a central element in the Psalms. As the man after God's own heart, David's heart for God is reflected in the legacy not only of the psalms composed by him, but the entire Psalter as a curation of prayers and praises to God set to music for Israel's corporate worship. As a "cantata of the Davidic Covenant," the Psalter rehearses David's covenant relationship with God, emphasizes the promises given to him, and rests in Yahweh's faithfulness to fulfill all that he promised.

Within its emphasis on David and his covenant with God, the Psalms also offer a hopeful view of Israel's messianic future. The Royal Psalms portray the ideal Davidic king, a picture which every generation of Israel hoped would characterize their Davidic ruler. Sadly, none of David's descendants realized these hopes, yet they were kept alive by prophetic promises of a future descendant of David would fulfill all that was expected on the Davidic king. Because Jesus Christ came and realized this ideal, we can view the royal psalms as ultimately messianic in their expectation. However, there is a caution in how we read these psalms. Chisholm explains:

Because the Davidic ideal portrayed in the royal psalms is fully and finally realized through Jesus, these psalms are often classified as messianic psalms. The label is appropriate, but in need of qualification. The royal psalms, by their literary nature, are not inherently prophetic and should not be understood as direct predictions of Jesus' messianic reign. As already noted, they express an ideal which, though probably attached with renewed hope to many historical Davidic kings on the occasion of their accession to the throne, is ultimately and fully realized in and through Jesus. As such, these psalms are to be understood as messianic in an indirect sense, in contrast to the messianic predictions of prophetic literature, which, though also rooted in the Davidic covenant ideal, may be classified as directly messianic on the basis of the literary genre in which they appear.¹⁹

With very few exceptions (e.g., Ps 110), the royal psalms "more naturally reflect the historical background of ancient Israel, not the future reign of Christ," and yet "the ideal expressed in the psalm as a whole finds its realization in Jesus, not in a mere human ruler."²⁰

¹⁹ Ibid., 269.

[See Pss 2, 45, 72, 89, 110, 132]

IV. Purpose

The righteous pray to and praise Yahweh as they await the coming of God's kingdom.

Since the wicked have not yet been judged, Messiah has not yet come, nor his kingdom established, the Psalms function today in the same way as they did for the original recipients. The righteous are to pray and praise Yahweh the way the psalmists did until God finally sends Messiah and establishes his kingdom on the earth. Then, the righteous will finally reign and the wicked will be judged. Or as Brian Toews writes, "The book of Psalms instructs the reader concerning faith in God's person, works, and word that God will deliver the King and all blessed in him from their troubles and wicked enemies and bring them to Zion to the praise and glory of God."²¹

V. Literary Structure

The organization of the Psalter into five books paralleling the five books of the Torah has already been discussed previously. As Toew writes concerning the editing of the Psalter into a book,

The most important issue in regard to the shaping of the Psalter is not who shaped it into the book as we now have it, but the theological perspective of the 'Psalms-shaper.' From Daniel 9 and Ezra 1 it is clear that the book of Jeremiah and the Law of Moses were read and played a significant role in the hopes of Israel in the post-exilic period. The shaper of the Psalter then knew the prophetic picture of the restoration of Israel (Dt 30:1-10; Jer 30-33). Living in the post-exilic context as revealed in the books of Ezra/Nehemiah, Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi it would have been clear to the psalms-shaper that the prophetic promises of God to Israel had not fully been realized. They had returned from exile in fulfillment of the Lord's seventy year promise (Jer. 29:12; Ezra 1:1) but the kingdom had not yet come. Instead they were slaves on the land (Ezr. 9:9 and Neh. 9:39). For the psalms-shaper his perspective must be one which looks forward to the future. God's plan for Israel and the nations in the Abrahamic promise and the Seed were still to come.

Thus, the "Psalm-shaper," as Toews calls him, looked to the eschaton. He created a Psalter which held out hope of the fulfillment of God's promises to David, and the five-fold division of the book takes the reader through a narrative-like journey from David to Solomon (Books 1-2), to the Babylonian exile (Book 3) and life in exile (Book 4), and finally the return from exile to the land (Book 5).

But at the beginning of the Psalter, the editor introduces the book in a most strategic and intentional way. "That Psalms 1-2," writes, Toews, "have been purposively placed at the beginning of the Psalter is virtually universally accepted in the current literature. . . . An introduction serves a text-wide function: to acquaint the readership to the main issues that a text is going to address. In other words, the introduction should provide the macrostructure elements of the entire text."²² What are those macrostructures? Toews identifies them as (1) God, (2) the wicked enemies, (3) the righteous, (4) communication/instruction, (5) deliverance/judgment, (6), the king, and (7) Israel. Toews' analysis identifies each of these elements within the first two psalms, making them a fitting introduction to the Psalter as a whole. Here, two anonymous psalms present the dichotomy of the righteous over the wicked, their relationships to Yahweh and his law, and then gives wise instruction to the nations/wicked to kiss the son.

²⁰ Ibid.

²¹ Brian G. Toews, "The Narrative Structure and Theological Design of the Psalter," unpublished paper, 6.

The Psalter then ends with a 4-psalm conclusion of unrelenting praise to Yahweh. All the laments and petitions of the book "has moved from petition to praise, from suffering to glory."²³

²² Ibid., 4.

²³ Ibid., 18.

THE NARRATIVE STRUCTURE OF THE PSALTER²⁴

Book I - David in Exile Trusts in the Lord for his Deliverance

Psalm 1-2 Anonymous - Introduction: The Instruction that Gives the Wisdom to Kiss the Son

Psalm 3-41 David - The King in Exile Trusts in the Lord for Deliverance from Death

Book II - The Ideal King is Coming; David and his Enemies are Judged

Psalm 42-49 Korah - The Ideal King Ushers in the Kingdom

Psalm 50 Asaph - God, the Judge of the Godly and Ungodly

Psalm 51 David - The Godly Man Judged

Psalm 52-71 David - The Enemies of God's Anointed Judged

Psalm 72 Solomon - The Kingdom of the Ideal King

Book III - The Pure in Heart Hope in God; Israel's Unfaithfulness has Led to Judgment

Psalm 72-83 Asaph - God has Judged Israel but there is Hope based on God's Past Work

Psalm 84-85 Korah - The Glory of the Temple and Petition for Deliverance

Psalm 86 - David - Prayer for Salvation and Faith

Psalm 87-88 Korah - The Glory of Zion and Petition for Deliverance

Psalm 89 Ethan - The Davidic Promise and Present Judgment of Davidic Kingdom

Book IV - Israel in 'wilderness' exile looks to the eternal King of Heaven

Psalm 90 Moses - The Eternality of God vs. Man under the Judgment of God

Psalm 91-100 Anonymous - The Wisdom for those who Wait

Psalm 101-103 David - Praise and Trust in the Midst of Affliction

Psalm 104-106 Anonymous - The Great Works of the Lord

Book V - The Restoration of Israel from Exile and the Look to the Future

Psalm 107 Anonymous - GIVE THANKS TO YAHWEH

Psalm 108-110 DAVID Texts

Psalm 111-117 Anonymous - PRAISE YAHWEH

Psalm 118 Anonymous - GIVE THANKS TO YAHWEH

Psalm 119 Anonymous - The Grand Torah Psalm

Psalm 120-134 Various Authors - The Songs of Ascent

Psalm 135 Anonymous - PRAISE YAHWEH

Psalm 136-137 Anonymous - GIVE THANKS TO YAHWEH

Psalm 138-145 DAVID texts

Psalm 146-150 Anonymous - Concluding PRAISE

²⁴ Adapted from Toews, 20